Views of Lee,

EAST LEE —AND— SOUTH LEE,

MASSACHUSETTS.

IN THE BEAUTIFUL BERKSHIRE HILLS.

LEE is irregular in outline, and lies between the Taconic and Green Mountain range, in the midst of the beautiful Berkshire Hills,—a fact of itself sufficient to attest the attractiveness of its natural situation. It is distant 161 miles from Boston, 155 miles from New York, 11 miles from Pittsfield, 5 miles from Lenox, 5 miles from Stockbridge. Famous for its paper manufactures and marble quarries. Within the territory of this town the Housatonic courses with rapid and often narrowed current, having curiously crooked and winding courses that form for it a principal feature wherever it is found in Berkshire. But it is here, as everywhere, superlatively beautiful. Also, it furnishes to the Lee locality and hamlets most valuable water-power, which is largely utilized.

Besides this river, Lee has also some fine water sheets, notable elements of the natural scenes and pictures. The territory is undulating and hilly in all parts, rising not at all abruptly from the valley of the Housatonic to the mountain ranges outside of its boundaries, and abounding in charming situations on every side, often the abodes of thrift and represenative New England life. The New York, New Haven and Hartford Railroad follows the course of the river from the Stockbridge to the Lenox lines.
